A system of rituals dating from distant past is found in Sinhala Buddhist society in Sri Lanka. All these rituals show a Buddhist influence in them. Buddhism is not a religion that emphasizes worship of an invisible supreme force that controls human society or observes rites and rituals to such a force. It should be inquired into how a belief in invisible forces that influence ones life and a mass of rites and rituals performed for them cannot exist in a society that followed such a religion for 2500 years and also the Buddhist influence on them and why that occurred.
